November 30, 2018 – Naked and Afraid: Social Work Ethics Stripped Down

Presented by: Union University School of Social Work | The Center for Just and Caring Communities

Come join this case-based workshop where we will explore together the ever-changing landscape of ethical social work practice. Simulation and group analysis will drive this three-hour tour through a jungle of ethical quicksand to challenge social workers at all levels of professional practice.

Participants who attend this workshop will:

- Get a grasp of changes in the 2018 revision of the NASW Code of Ethics
- Become more aware of common and uncommon ethical blunders that can occur in social work practice
- Consider implications of unethical behaviors and potential consequences for both client and social worker
- Explore practice strategies that promote and lead to informed ethical practice
- Learn to use ethical missteps for professional growth
